Johnny Depp's ongoing lawsuits with ex-lawyers Bloom Hergott recently resolved after the transactions, IANS reported.

A settlement was announced by the parties, stating the need to avoid a trial which was initially scheduled to take place in December.

According to court documents, Depp was beset by financial problems and claimed that his oral contract with talent lawyer Bloom was void due to California stature which requires the arrangement of a contingency fee.

However the Los Angeles Superior Court Judge refused to accept it. It was made clear that even if the agreement was ripped up, Bloom would not have been required to return the money.

Bloom Hergott pursed that the firm required adequate compensation for the services rendered. Depp blamed the ex-lawyer and stated that she steered him towards trouble while Bloom worked on investigating Depp's previous matters with other lawyers.

Attorney Bryan Freedman stated, "The former law firm of Bloom Hergott, with the help of its insurance carrier, has favourably settled the litigation with Depp for a fraction of his original demand."
