LOS ANGELES – Gabrielle Union and NBC all reported on Wednesday that they had a “productive” initial dialogue about her resignation from “America’s Bought Expertise” and her allegations that she had been eliminated about her complaints about racism and various troubling habits.

“We had a long 5-hour, and what I considered, productive meeting yesterday,” said Union on Twitter. “I was able to reclassify my unfiltered reality. I led with transparency and my will and hope for actual change. ”

NBC stated in a claim that the “preliminary dialogue was frank and productive. While additional research is likely to take place to gain a deeper understanding of the information, we are working with Gabrielle to return to a constructive decision. ”

Bryan Freedman, legal professional at Union, said Tuesday’s meeting with representatives from Fremantle, the current production company, was a good start.

“We are ready to see the next steps on whether or not to go NBC to ensure that actual adjustments have been made to monitor participants and expertise,” Freedman said.

Union, an actress who was best recognized for her roles in films along with “Carry It On” and “Unhealthy Boys II”, was a choice in the expertise show, but she and fellow choice Julianne Hough were not asked to return after their first season.

Selection then reported that Union, who is black, believed she was fired because she had asked NBC and current producers to maintain an atmosphere that tolerated racist jokes and comments, along with what they called a number of producer notes they were her hair was ‘too black’ for the viewers of ‘America’s Bought Expertise’.

Union also complained about different habits, which corresponds to the fact that judge-producer Simon Cowell smokes on the indoor set, Selection reported.

The Actors Guild – American Federation of TV and Radio Artists screen, of which Union is a member, reported on Monday that it also worked with her to investigate her complaints.

Without immediately referring to NBC or the 2 companies that produce the present, Fremantle and Syco, Union has tweeted a number of times about its state of affairs, the assistance it has received, acknowledged and retweet indications of simple methods of correct to apologize.

Several major names on social media, along with Union’s husband, former NBA participant Dwyane Wade, have referred to solutions why she was fired.
